WebCT Available to UF Faculty

Faculty now have a new tool to turn to when making their materials accessible via the Web-WebCT. The University of Florida bought a site-license for Web Course Tools (WebCT), which eases the transition between traditional classroom teaching and the electronic delivery of information. CIRCA is hosting the WebCT server.

According to the WebCT homepage (http://www.webct.com), "It can be used to create entire on-line courses, or to simply publish materials that supplement existing courses."

WebCT includes a point-and-click graphical user interface that faculty members can use to add a bulletin board system, on-line chat, student progress tracking, group project organization, grade maintenance and distribution, navigation tools, auto-graded quizzes, electronic mail, course calendar, student homepages, course content searches, and more.

For more information about WebCT, including how to sign-up to start using it, please see http://www.citt.ufl.edu/webct.html.

The Faculty Support Center is offering free four-hour classes about WebCT. For more information about courses, please see http://www.fsc.ufl.edu, and click on the "Classes" link.
