IT Day Comes to UF

"What the Heck Is Going On Around Here?" is the question that the First Annual Information Technology Day will try to answer for faculty and staff at UF.

"The goal is to provide information about 'What the Heck is Going On' in Information Technology on campus, and to provide the UF community with information on changes made in the information technology field in the last several months—and there have been a lot of them," said Vicki Kitts-Turner, NERDC Information Services coordinator, who is coordinating the event for the Office of the Chief Information Officer.

The two-day event will feature a combination of speakers from UF and select vendors.

Topics to be covered include:

• Keynote speeches kicking off both days by Earl Robbins, interim UF chief information officer
• Grade-A-Gator, which will cover the new online grade submission system that faculty will use to input students' grades beginning Spring 2000.
• EAGLE, which enables access to CICS and other resources from the Web.
• CIRCA: changes and new services
• Software copyright guidelines
• UF's Y2K readiness (see page 1)
• UF Webmaster Christian Conrad and the Acceptable Use Policy
• GatorLink Accounts (required Fall 1999 semester, see page 6)
• Execmail (new e-mail client available to UF)
• New document imaging services
• NETg, interactive online computer training (see page 4)
• SOARS, the Web Site for Online Administrative ResourceS
• TRRIPS, the online travel system
• Office of Instructional Resource's Center for Instructional Technology and Training
